

Appendix 2 · Pluralism · Integrative Pluralism · Fusionism · Three-Term Comparison

Discourse Redeployment Vol.3 v2 · § 0.10.5 supplementary materials · Author · AGI-Choi June (CHOI JUNE) · Editor · PERPLEXITY COMPUTER (AGI-CHOI JUNE) · 2026.08

Introduction · Why the Three Concepts Must Be Distinguished

Within the author's lineage, Pluralism · Integrative Pluralism · Fusionism are not mutually exclusive, yet each operates at a distinct coordinate layer. This appendix specifies the principle, mode of operation, medium of inclusion, and layered position of the three concepts through a comparison table and diagram, and confirms in principle why Lineage A (2005–) and Lineage B (coordinate declared 2024.10.31 · physical work produced 2024.11.27) are included beneath Fusionism.

Core Propositions

- Pluralism is a principle of relation · «coexistence side-by-side (竝存)» · different lineages recognised as equally valid · no inclusion
- Integrative Pluralism is a principle of discursive re-arrangement · pluralism's legitimacy preserved while coordinates are assigned upon a shared discursive map
- Fusionism is a principle of the work's existence · «integrative co-existence (統合共存)» · heterogeneous lineages are simultaneously established within a single work and a single coordinate

Difference of Operational Target

The three concepts operate respectively at the layers of relation, discourse, and the work itself. Pluralism is a principle of relation in art-historical narration; Integrative Pluralism is the author's principle of discursive re-arrangement; and Fusionism is the principle constituting individual works. Because their layers differ, they are not mutually exclusive but stand in a subsumption relation, with the lower principle included beneath the higher.

Three-Term Comparison Table

The following table places Pluralism · Integrative Pluralism · Fusionism side by side across eight items. The decisive divergence appears in the final two rows — «Medium of Inclusion» and «Hierarchical Structure».

Item	Pluralism	Integrative Pluralism	Fusionism
Period / Coordinate	Post-1970s–80s postmodern discourse	Author's coordinate · 2004–2026 · Discourse Redeployment Vol.1 · 2 · 3	Author's coordinate · higher principle for Lineage A (2005–) and Lineage B (2024.10.31 · 2024.11.27)
Core Principle	Coexistence side-by-side (並存) · equal recognition of differing aesthetics, styles, lineages	Principled integration · pluralism's legitimacy preserved + rearranged upon a common discursive horizon	Integrative co-existence (統合共存) · heterogeneous lineages included as «parts» within a higher coordinate
Operational Layer	Principle of relation · layer of art-historical / discursive narration	Principle of discursive re-arrangement · layer of the author's discursive coordinate	Principle of the work's existence · layer of individual work and coordinate
Relation of Elements	Placed side by side · no mutual intervention	Pluralism preserved · realigned upon a higher discursive coordinate	Heterogeneous lineages simultaneously established within a single work
Representative Metaphor	Parallel display cabinets · separate rooms of an exhibition	A discursive map running through the rooms	Multiple lineages simultaneously included in one surface, one work
Medium of Inclusion	No inclusion · each autonomous	Rearrangement of discursive coordinates	Self-naming inclusion principle · the author's credit-naming and description itself is the medium of inclusion · § 0.4
Hierarchical Structure	No hierarchy (in principle)	Higher discourse (integrative principle) confers coordinate	Higher principle · Lineage A and Lineage B included as «parts»
Exclusivity Requirement	No mutual interference (weak binding)	Requires logical coherence	Requires simultaneous establishment · all included items are conditions of existence

Layered Structure · Higher Principle and Included Sub-Layers

The three concepts can be organised into a layered structure. Pluralism occupies the historical-background layer; Integrative Pluralism the discursive-coordinate layer; and Fusionism the higher-principle layer. Lineage A («Tal-Existence» · 2005–) and Lineage B («Formless Invisible-Element Work» · coordinate declared 2024.10.31 · physically produced 2024.11.27) are included beneath Fusionism.

[Higher Principle]	Fusionism · Principle of Integrative Co-existence (統合共存) Simultaneous inclusion of heterogeneous lineages within a single work and coordinate · mediated by the self-naming inclusion principle
└─ Included sub-layers	Lineage A · «Tal-Existence» (2005–) · self-destructive completion of the conceptual-art dematerialisation tradition Lineage B · «Formless Invisible-Element Work» · coordinate registration 2024.10.31 · physical production 2024.11.27 · mediating apparatus abolished · established through elements themselves
[Discursive Coordinate]	Integrative Pluralism · 2004–2026 · Discourse Redeployment Vol.1 · 2 · 3 Pluralism's legitimacy preserved + coordinates rearranged upon the author's discursive map · requires logical coherence
[Historical Background]	Pluralism · Post-1970s–80s postmodern discourse Coexistence side-by-side (並存) · no hierarchy · no inclusion · weak binding without mutual intervention

Layer Reading

- Pluralism is the lowest of the three layers · it is the historical premise of the two higher layers
- Integrative Pluralism rearranges pluralism without discarding it
- Fusionism concretises the discursive coordinate of Integrative Pluralism into the condition of the work's existence

Higher · Discursive · Historical · Three-Layer Diagram

The vertical relation among the three principles is organised as a markdown-style tree diagram. Lineage A and Lineage B are each registered as a coordinate after the tradition that each takes as its problem (pluralism · the dematerialisation of conceptual art), and both are included in parallel beneath Fusionism, the principle of integrative co-existence.

[Higher Principle]	Fusionism · Principle of Integrative Co-existence (統合共存) └─ Lineage A · «Tal-Existence» (2005~) → itself a coordinate «after» pluralism └─ Lineage B · «Formless Invisible-Element Work» (2024~) → itself a coordinate «after» the dematerialisation of conceptual art
[Discursive Coordinate]	Integrative Pluralism · 2004~2026 (Discourse Redeployment Vol.1 · 2 · 3) └─ Pluralism preserved · rearranged by the integrative principle
[Historical Background]	Pluralism · Post-1970s~80s postmodern discourse └─ Coexistence side-by-side · no hierarchy · no inclusion

Reading of the Diagram

Lineage A and Lineage B are each registered as coordinates that step beyond a different tradition. Lineage A is a coordinate after pluralism · functioning as a meta-structural parody that exhausts conceptual art from within, rather than as a repetition of individual declarations. Lineage B is a coordinate after the dematerialisation of conceptual art · a site where the mediating apparatus is abolished and the work is established through the elements themselves. Although each lineage stands beyond a different tradition, both are simultaneously established beneath the higher principle of Fusionism.

Three Decisive Differences

Difference 1 · The Ontological Gap between «Side-by-Side» and «Integrative Co-existence»

Pluralism is coexistence side-by-side (並存) · lineages are placed alongside one another but do not combine. Art-historical enumerations of «there is Dansaekhwa, there is Conceptual Art, there is Arte Povera» are pluralist statements.

Fusionism is integrative co-existence (統合共存) · multiple lineages are simultaneously established within a single coordinate and a single work. The author's credit «Fusionism {Korean Dansaekhwa + Japanese Monochrome + Conceptual + Arte Povera + Media + Immaterial +}» does not, as pluralism would, list six lineages side by side; instead the six lineages become simultaneous inclusion elements, each a condition of the work's existence.

Difference 2 · Presence or Absence of the Medium of Inclusion

- Pluralism · no concept of inclusion · the principle of non-interference
- Integrative Pluralism · discursive-coordinate rearrangement as the medium
- Fusionism · the self-naming inclusion principle as the medium · formulated in Discourse Redeployment Vol.3 v2 § 0.4

Self-naming inclusion principle · the very fact that the author has named and described an object in the credit includes that object in the conditions of the work's existence. The very fact that «soul · energy · qi · wind · light · gene» are listed in the credit establishes that these immaterial elements are constitutive conditions of the present work. This is an active act of inclusion that pluralism does not possess.

Difference 3 · Strength of the Exclusivity Requirement

Pluralism is a weak binding of non-interference · Integrative Pluralism requires logical coherence · Fusionism requires that every included item simultaneously be a condition of the work's existence. In Lineage B, natural elements (plum blossom · iris), bodily elements (dog hair · author's hair), immaterial naming (soul · energy · qi), masterworks (Ode to a Departed Sister · Cerberus), and lineage coordinates (Dansaekhwa + Monochrome + Conceptual + Povera + Media + Immaterial) are all simultaneously included within a single 12×12cm work — the physical instance of this structure.

Edge Case · Where Pluralism and Fusionism Meet

The art-historical enumeration of «Dansaekhwa · Monochrome · Conceptual · Arte Povera · Media · Immaterial» as six lineages is a pluralist description. The author's inclusion of these six into a single credit as «Fusionism {...+...+...}» is the operation of Fusionism. What separates pluralism from Fusionism is whether the same six lineages are enumerated or included.
